Industry & Education Partnering Together to Build Tomorrow's Workforce

A cornerstone of the CAPS program is integrating industry into the educational opportunities for high school juniors and seniors.

Through the CAPS model, the industry integration and student experience is intended to be mutually beneficial.

By engrossing students in a business environment, students begin applying their academic background to problem solving with the specific industry.

Business partners are at the heart of the CAPS program. The program features problem-based learning brought in by business partners.

There is no minimum threshold of involvement and finding the right fit for each business partner is a priority. Mentors and guest speakers are always in demand as well as project and internship opportunities.

Relevance is central to the CAPS learning model. Our students solve real problems. With real tools (used by real professionals), being mentored by real employers, leading to real contributions in the professional arena. To support that learning model, we are always looking for challenging projects that will train our students in key skills for employability.

CAPS is an exploratory program exposing students to all aspects of the specific industry. Through their exploration, they can begin to learn their strengths and passion to develop a realistic post-secondary plan and career goals.
